

Napalm is NOT healthy for children ... nor other living things....

Midland, Michigan (100 miles north of Ann Arbor) will be the scene of the annual stockholders' meeting of the Dow Chemical Corp., makers of Napalm, on Wednesday, May 8th.

The National Committee of Clergy and Laymen Concerned about Vietnam has had several stock proxies signed over to them and will have several prominent national figures (among them the Rev. William Sloane Coffin) to attend the stockholders' meeting to raise fundamental questions about the continuing production of napalm. They will try to make the stockholders more aware that the use of napalm for the destruction of human life is an affront to humanity in a civilized world.

Within the Board of Directors of the Dow Corp. there is a split on the issue of napalm production. The hope is to take advantage of that fact so that Dow will be forced to drop its napalm contract with the government.

During the stockholders' meeting, there will be a dignified, non-violent demonstration outside the building by those who are anguished by the suffering of napalm victims. Campus and community peace groups in a five state area (Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Michigan) are being invited to be a part of this witness.

Ann Arbor is to be the staging area for the demonstration. People will be arriving in town on Tuesday eve, May 7th, for a meeting at the First Methodist Church (corner of State and Huron) where complete information and instructions for the demonstration will be given. The Rev. William Sloane Coffin and other national and local figures will also speak at this meeting.
